Dawn of Peace in Mexico

It is more than likely that Villa will turn up somewhere in Mexico to denounce the intimation, coming from Nogales, that he abandoned his followers after the battle of Hermosillo. But the other part of this report which sets forth that Villa's followers are deserting him steadily and in increasing numbers, seems too well founded to be overthrown by a breath of denial from Villa. For example, there is the testimony of American army officers for the statement that several hundred of Villa's followers sought refuge on this side of the border following the fighting at Agua Prieta. Most of these were wounded, it is true, but only a few of them were so seriously wounded as to make that a sufficient reason for quitting the Villa standard. Again, there is the directness and circumstantiality to this latest report from Nogales that argue for its acceptance. In fine, there has been a rapid accumulation of evidence during the last ten days indicating the disintegration of Villa's forces. His cause has long been a waning one, and now it begins to look as if it had collapsed irreparably and finally.

For the belief that peace is about to dawn in Mexico one can find a good deal of encouragement in the report that came from San Antonio the other day giving the statistics of the freight movement into Mexico through Texas gateways, for the last two days of last week. It is not merely the increase in the freight movement that was encouraging, but the growing proportion of commodities that serve the necessities of civil life. Ammunition and arms continue to be shipped, but the shipments of clothing and foodstuffs showed a much greater increase, while, within two days, thirty carloads of machinery were hauled across the Texas border into Mexico, something which, it was remarked, had not occurred for many months previously.

The dawn of peace in Mexico has been heralded many times during the last five years, and as many times the hopes thus roused have been disappointed. But none of these prophecies have been made up of elements so substantial as those afforded by the developments of the last month.—Dallas News.

GOT SOME BEANS

Sneak thieves touched the H. Herzstein Seed Co. for two sacks of beans and a quantity of bulk beans Friday night. The Pintos were taken from a car which was being loaded for shipment. Two search warrants were issued and searches made but the beans were not located.

Home Economics Club.

The following is the program for Saturday afternoon, Dec. 11, 1915. Lesson. Sugar. Mrs. Gill, Leader. Roll call. My favorite homemade candy and how I make it.

Paper. Some facts about sugar as a food.—Mrs. J. W. Thompson.

Short readings on the kinds and sources of sugar: beet, cane, maple, milk, glucose, molasses, honey.—Mrs. Savage.

Principles of sugar cookery.—Mrs. Dum.

Demonstrations of the following candies: Peanut brittle, Mrs. Gill; Fondant, Miss Hutchinson; Fudge, Mrs. Thompson; Penocha, Mrs. Paddock.

Questions for discussion.

To what class of foods does sugar belong?—Mrs. Kerlin. Where and how is it digested in the body?—Mrs. Savage. What is its function in the body?—Mrs. Talbot. What are the dangers of an excess amount of sugar in the diet?—Mrs. Heringa. Is sugar a desirable food for one doing muscular work?—Mrs. Gill. Does sugar make children's teeth rot?—Mrs. Pettit. Which is preferable in the diet, homemade candy or fruits? Why?—Mrs. Hodges.

Please notice that we have changed our day from Friday to Saturday and the club will meet at the home of Mrs. Jos. Gill.

Strong and Well as Ever

Fred Smith, 325 Main St., Green Bay, Wis., says: "I suffered a long time with a very weak back. Foley Kidney Pills completely relieved me of all soreness and pain and now I am strong and well as ever." Winter aggravates symptoms of kidney trouble; cold weather makes aching joints, sore muscles, and irregular bladder action more unbearable. Foley Kidney Pills help the kidneys eliminate pain-causing poisons. City Drug Store.

Protectos After Varminits and Wild Hunters.

A varmint kills livestock. A varmint kills game. Why then should not stockmen and game protectionists join forces in combating varminits? This is the question which the newly organized game associations of New Mexico are asking themselves, and wondering why nobody ever thought of it before.

The annual loss of livestock from predatory animals has been estimated to be $15,000,000. Many stockmen figure that the average lobo wolf destroys $1,000 worth of beef a year. It is well known that a fat colt is the mountain lion's absolute ideal of epicurean delight, and no colt survives where lions are found. As for the coyote, whenever he can not get lamb he takes mutton. But all these extravagant fellows eat game between times. Venison, the lambs of mountain sheep, turkey, antelope fawns, grouse eggs, young wild ducklings, quail—every kind of wild game in New Mexico is to be found on the bill of fare of one or all of them. Forest officers tell of one instance of finding seven deer killed by lions on one small corner of the Gila national forest. So it is all over the state.

The game protective associations of New Mexico are going to help enforce the game laws. That, of course, is a first essential to a better game supply. But they are also going further than that, and seek to reduce the natural enemies of the game. This they can do by organized co-operation with stockmen. Just what form of action will be taken will have to be threshed out in conference with the livestock associations. It appears certain, however, that the game protective associations will be a new and weighty factor in the predatory animal campaign.

Game protective associations are now at work in Taos, Magdalena, Albuquerque and Silver City. They are co-operating closely with the state game warden and the United States forest service. Some are confronted with peculiar local problems. At Magdalena, for instance, the annual flood of hunters has become so large that a great deal of crippled each year by stray bullets from high power rifles. To prevent this the Magdalena Game Protective association is figuring on reaching each party of hunters with a special letter, asking them to avoid indiscriminate shooting, and at the same time warning them against violations of the game law and carelessness with forest fires.

Camilo Padilla, chief deputy game warden, represented the state game warden, Trinidad C. de Baca, at the meeting. He gave a short talk on game protection and told the members that the game law improvements secured from the last legislature were good but that more of them could have been obtained if there had been more game protective associations to aid in the work.

Cowmen Admit Hog is an Animal

Artesia, N. M., Dec. 2.—The stockmen of the Pecos valley have always resented the incoming sheep men and farmers, and more especially have they disliked the oft expressed idea that a hog is an animal, just the same as cow, but this week there isn't a stockman, cow or sheep, who dares raise his head when a swine breeder passes him on the street. For it became known Monday that W. F. Holloman of Artesia, had traded one young pig for six young calves to a Carlsbad man named Hubbard.

Of course, no cowman could possibly see why a man with a calf would want to trade for a pig at all, but had the trade gone the other way, and Hubbard received six pigs for one calf, there would have been nothing said about the matter. It is like the old editor's definition of news: "If a rat eats a rat, that isn't news, but if a rat eats a cat, that's worth publishing." So while trade of one calf for several pigs, or even the trade of one bum calf for one good pig would have been considered legitimate, the fact that Holloman got six perfectly good calves for one extra good pig is more than the stockmen can stand, so they sit and watch.

The pig, to add insult to injury, was less than six months old, but he was an aristocrat, a full-blooded Duroc-Jersey of the purest stock, and the trade was really an even swap on the basis of money valuation. Mr. Hubbard will use the boar to start a herd of thoroughbred hogs on his farm near Carlsbad, and Mr. Holloman will fatten the calves for the market.

Your Printer is Responsible for the Appearance of Your Printing

Just as he is responsible for the appearance of your home paper. If the paper is neat and well appearing, stationery from his shop will be neat and well appearing. The man who spends money for printing cannot afford to spend it for inferior work. Notice the well displayed ads in this paper; how the prevailing idea is brought out for the benefit of the reader; notice the impression and the print; the type looks right out at you because it is well printed as it should be. Work leaving this shop must be up to The News standard of excellence, and "High" is a crank about that standard. Ask his printers.
